RE: Reply Comments on the Further Notice of Proposed Rule-Making, Adopted April 26, 2001

Funds For Learning, LLC, is an educational technology consulting company specializing in the E-rate program. We manage the applications and associated paperwork of school and library applicants and independently provide a variety of communications and educational services to the vendor community to help them in their E-rate-related activities. In the recent comment period on the Federal Communications Commission’s (“the Commission”) Notice of Proposed Rule-making, we joined in comments filed by the Coalition for Predictable E-rate Priorities. At this time, we would like to make some additional observations in response to comments that have been previously filed.

- 1. The Commission should approve a permanent extension in the installation deadline for the schools and libraries program, but give itself sufficient flexibility to be able to make exceptions.

We agree with the many commenters who encouraged the commission to permanently extend the installation deadline for non-recurring services in the E-rate program to the Sept. 30 following the close of the funding year. We also agree that the Commission should codify its waiver policy, which in the past has given applicants a minimum of six months to complete their installations when their funding commitments were delayed because of circumstances such as an appeal. Both of these actions would improve the predictability of the E-rate program for applicants and vendors alike.

The Commission has proposed providing waivers for a number of circumstances, including for “applicants whose service providers were unable to complete implementation for reasons beyond the service provider’s control.” We encourage the Commission to adopt a broad definition of what will be considered “beyond the service provider’s control.” In conversations with the vendor community, Schools and Libraries Division officials have indicated that they take this to mean “acts of God” that prevent work from being completed on schedule. We submit that with thousands of U.S. school districts doing the bulk of their internal connections work over the summer months, additional problems can occur. These might include delays in the manufacturing pipeline, shipping delays and labor shortages. As the Commission discovered when it issued its ruling in an appeal case involving the Copan, OK, school district, it can be difficult for the Commission to anticipate in advance every problem that may occur.¹ However, broad reasonable guidelines will ensure that projects can go forward with simple SLD review and without bogging down the Commission with requests for waivers because of a variety of unforeseen, but legitimate, contingencies that may lead to a missed deadline.

2. The vast majority of commenters supported keeping the current priority rules in place for Funding Year 4—even those who might benefit from the proposed change.

A review of the comments filed in response to the Commission’s proposed change in the priority funding rules showed that the vast majority of commenters urged the Commission to keep the current rules in place. What was notable in at least two cases, however, was that the commenters supported retaining the current rules, even when they acknowledged that their applicant group or their school district might actually benefit from the proposed change.

For instance, the status quo was supported by the Memphis City Schools, which, with an 81 percent district-wide discount rate, fell just below the threshold for approved internal connections in Funding Year 3. Although the district might well benefit from the proposed change, as one of those applicants described as “economically disadvantaged, albeit not to the same degree,” it strongly opposed the proposed change. Changing the rules in the middle of an application year, it said, “undermines the integrity of the program and is a slap in the face to all applicants that take the rules of the program seriously and that literally spend months [to] ensure that their applications will withstand the highest scrutiny.”²

Similarly, the American Library Association correctly noted how the current regulations for calculating discount rates, and the demand for internal connections support, combine to deny support to some of the nation’s neediest libraries.³ Nevertheless, the ALA strongly opposed the proposed change in the priority rules. The current rule, it wrote “in fact may not be the most desirable option for libraries, but it is the accepted and known program rule that existed at the time of the opening and closing of the application window.” In short, it is “the only viable option.”

Further, those applicants that would qualify for discounts in the range of 60-50 percent, and thus supported the proposed change, are still likely to be disappointed. Even with the change, the SLD reported on May 18, it would probably only be able to support applicants down to the 81 percent discount rate.⁴ Thus it appears the proposed change would subject applicants to massive disruptions and wasted effort—with little real change in the kind of applicants that would be supported.

3. The FCC needs to embark immediately on a thoughtful review of how best to achieve the program's goals.

We hope that the strong opposition expressed from all corners of the E-rate stakeholder community will lead the Commission to abandon this particular change at this time. However, we hope that the Commission will immediately launch a new rule-making to explore possible alternative responses for closing the gap between real needs and available funds, so that new rules, if any, can be put in place in time for the application season for Funding Year 5. In that regard, there is not a moment to waste. Now that Form 470 applications can be filed at any time of year, applicants may already be developing RFPs for Funding Year 5. In addition, many businesses and organizations representing the applicant community begin their annual E-rate training activities in late summer and early fall to be ready when the filing window opens.

Many commenters called on the Commission and the SLD to provide additional data and modeling to help determine the impact of any proposed rule change. As a first step, Funds For Learning provides, as Attachment A, its analysis of those applicants that would be affected by the change the Commission initially proposed for Year 4. This data is compiled from the SLD's published list of Funding Year 3 commitments. We are the first to acknowledge that it does not begin to tell the full story. It does, however, demonstrate some of the potential problems with the Commission's proposed rule change.

The first list provides the names of billed entities that received support for internal connections at the 90 percent discount rate in Year 3. Without a review of the actual applications, we cannot know whether the applicant qualified on a site-specific basis or on a shared basis. In the case of private schools, single school buildings, or libraries, the chances are that the funding commitment was provided specifically to the named billed entity applicant. In the case of school districts, the chances are greater that the services were delivered to a particular site or sites that are identified within the application.

Next is a list of applicants who qualified for support at discount rates of 82 to 89 percent. With the exception of libraries, these applicants, by virtue of having a discount rate that did not end in zero, obviously had applied for the services on a shared basis, possibly on behalf of all of the schools within a district, or, in the case of larger jurisdictions, all the schools in a state or territory. However, without access to additional application data, the ultimate impact of the proposed change cannot be determined precisely.

Some of these applicants qualified for millions of dollars worth of support, while others qualified for less than $1,000. Under the FCC proposal, the amount of funding awarded for Year 3 would not matter—all recipients designated by the details of the application would be excluded for Funding Year 4.

Many commenters suggested that on many applications, individual schools were listed as receiving shared services that may, in fact, have not received them. Because E-rate applicants certify that “the discount level used for shared services is conditional, for future years, upon ensuring that the most disadvantaged schools and libraries that are treated as sharing in the service, receive an appropriate share of benefits from those services,” this may suggest that the Commission needs to define more clearly what constitutes “an appropriate share” of the benefits, and the penalty for failing to share that amount.

4. The Commission should immediately begin a rule-making that will articulate what it views as the proper goals of the E-rate program and how best to achieve those goals. As part of that discussion, the Commission should also specify whether it is willing to make more money available to support the goals of the schools and libraries program, and if so, the source of those funds.

We believe that WorldCom, in its comments, posed the central dilemma very well:

The Commission's proposal is not in keeping with the Joint Board's recommendation to establish greater discounts for the most economically disadvantaged schools and libraries. The Commission asserts that its proposal would be ". . .targeted to the schools and libraries with the greatest need." But the commission failed to discuss the reason it believes less needy schools are in greater need. The Commission's logic leads one to conclude that it does not believe that the neediest schools requesting funding for internal connections two or more years in a row really have legitimate claims. If that is true, the commission needs to review the internal connection facilities it is funding, rather than use ad hoc administrative procedures to deny legitimate funding requests.⁵

Parties who commented in this round offered a wide variety of alternative proposals to the Commission even before it solicited them. Applicants naturally could be expected to propose a solution that would favor applicants like themselves. Thus, if the Commission heeds the overwhelming call for it to make no changes now, but to propose some changes for Funding Year 5, it must set out from the outset what propositions it is even willing to consider. We believe the Commission should address these questions, among others:

- Is the Commission willing to let the SLD commit more than $2.25 billion a year, particularly considering the history of applicants not ultimately using their commitments for a variety of valid reasons?

- Is the Commission willing to increase the level of contributions to the Universal Service Fund to provide more support for the schools and libraries program?

- Is it willing to revisit the priority rules that were put in place in mid-1998 that assigned a lower priority to internal connections, even though internal connections are frequently necessary to take advantage of commitments for advanced telecommunications services?

- Should a program designed to support advanced telecommunications services and Internet access to schools and libraries be used to underwrite the cost of basic telephone services?

⁵ Comments by WorldCom, Inc., May 23, 2001.

- If it is a given that the E-rate program should support POTS, should the Commission require that applicants leverage the money they save on those kinds of services into their technology budgets? (In our own experience, many technology leaders would welcome such a requirement.)

- If there is a perception that some E-rate applicants “have made out like bandits,” what are the perceived problems and how can the Commission address them? For instance, if policy makers believe that the available money should be spread farther, the Commission could study the feasibility of establishing a per-student or per-patron cap on how much an applicant could receive each funding year. This approach, coupled with the current priority system, would enable technology directors to make their own decisions on their priorities for their schools or libraries, rather than imposing them in a ham-handed sort of way from Washington.

5. The response to the Commission’s proposal underscores the need for policy makers to solicit a wide range of input on the potential impact of proposed changes.

The E-rate program is a complex program that is the result of a careful balancing of interests that are not always the same: school districts versus libraries, poor neighborhoods versus rich, school districts with strong technology champions versus others that have not made much progress, telecommunications companies versus other kinds of vendors, congressional critics versus congressional champions, the necessity to streamline the program versus the necessity to protect it from fraud. Thus a change that at first blush can appear to be, not only simple but well-intentioned can, unfortunately, create an unintended chain of events that the Commission, from its vantage point, could not have anticipated. Thus, we encourage the FCC to solicit feedback on concrete proposals from a wide representation of the various E-rate stakeholders.

Summary

From the start, the Commission made clear that the E-rate program was not to be a “handout” program, that recipients would have to contribute some funds of their own before they could receive services and products, that they would have to do some serious technology and budget planning and that they would have to pay close attention to the program's rules and regulations, which are designed to promote telecommunications competition and guard against fraud.

Some commenters, however, appeared to complain that they have been denied money that was their due, and that now it should be "their turn." We are reminded of a conversation one of our staff members had a year ago with a school district (we'll call it District A) that had a district-wide discount rate of about 65 percent. District A asked us to review why District B down the road, one of our clients, had fared so much better through the E-rate program than it had. True, District B had a discount rate that was a few percentage points higher. But the real difference was that District B was prepared to do the hard work: to develop a technology vision for its schools, to do the necessary technology planning and the time-consuming effort of developing RFPs and reviewing the responses, and to raise its share of the money to be able to take full advantage of the E-rate program. It was able to qualify for substantial funding commitments because it was willing to pay attention to the program's requirements and to invest a substantial amount of its own budget in technology improvements.

The E-rate program has achieved revolutionary changes in American schools, but it is by no means a miracle cure or panacea. Its beneficiaries must still be prepared to do the heavy lifting.
